

Since receiving XM radio and equipment as a gift two years ago, I do not listen to any other weather source, except sometimes the weather beacon here, on the internet. I don't watch much TV. My XM radio is mobile, and I have it at home and in my car. I live in a hurricane-prone area and a flood zone. I need to be able to flip my XM to weather at any time, especially now as hurricane season starts in June. Since finding out how superior XM is to regular radio, I don't even know where the local stations are on my car radio. If I get an evacuation order, I won't know it unless XM can access my weather information and broadcast it to me.
